

Duolingo Comments

2020-06-15

<https://forum.duolingo.com/comment/27766388>

USER: v49mha2k TIMESTAMP: "1 YEAR AGO"

Think about it in reverse - which particle would you put there? It doesn't get a は - 24 hours isn't the topic of the sentence. It doesn't get a が - 24 hours isn't the subject either. It's not the direct object so it doesn't get a を. You're not having the party "via" the 24 hours, so no で. No に since 24 hours isn't a specific time that you're partying at. The 24 hours don't belong to the party, so no の. You're not quoting the party, so no と. There are obviously tons more particles but these are the ones covered so far and you get where I'm going with this.

You don't need a particle there simply because there isn't one that really fits there. It might be easier to understand if you mentally reword the English sentence to, "I will have a 24-hour party" instead of the exact sentence Duo gave you for this example. These sentences are basically identical in English, right? Yet you probably don't think you need a particle in translating "24-hour party."